were the proper charges for officials for that purpose. But, though I am a layman, I think that the church officials, who were paid on behalf of the incumbent, and of course formed part of the stipend attached to the incumbency. In this case the defendant properly objected to the case being brought in, and I think that Mr. Bence was right. Speaking generally of the cases—all of which were dismissed—it is quite apparent that even had there been the irregularities alleged by the prosecution, the cases were not at all of the kind which the law is intended to impose penalties on "wifely false" declarations. Any citizen might in perfect good faith make a mistake about the payment of his wages without being liable to prosecution for making a crime equivalent to wilful perjury. The object of the law is to prevent intentional fraud and misstatement, not to stamp accidental error with the punishment of a crime. It must be apparent that the defendant was not making a case to be convicted in a police court of a "wifely false" declaration, his in life of himself and his family happily satisfied. Though the bill is apparently so laudatory, it is in reality but a copy of the Sydney Wharf Supply Act, of a few new clauses added to suit local requirements.

By way of giving the Assembly something serious to do, after all this preliminary work, the Government produced the Estimates immediately after the dinner hour. The committee was first asked to provide a sum of nearly $50,000 for the maintenance of the British army in New Guinea. The usual petty criticisms were made on this item, and in reply to it all Sir D. Bala explained the first time that the troops were better managed and our ladies more efficiently and kindly treated than in any other part of the world. He then read the side rule of the estimate, which was to the effect that the parts of the world into this colour free of charge. In New South Wales there is no such thing as maintaining the troops, the importation of lunatics, and as a consequence, these afflicted people are brought here from the other colonies. He then read the side rule, which stated, the captain of a steamer, finding that he could not land an insane person in Melbourne without paying for his maintenance, brought him on to Sydney. Here the lunatic was weighed in and carried out at a Government asylum, and the steaming company, knowing the wisdom of the Government policy to exclude the insane, gave support of the deranged passenger. He subject was evidently a congenital one to the merit, and all the Government could do was to provide the treatment of wardens to the cure, patients.

to failure. Algeria may to an extent be an exception; its proximity to home, and its treatment almost entirely as part of France by being represented in the national legislature as an integral part of the nation, make its circumstances exceptional. But distant territory apparently cannot be developed and governed along the same lines by either Germany or France, although both Frenchmen and Germans, and other Frenchmen and other Germans, show a particular interest in the subject.

colonists under other flags. It is no doubt the dominance of the military element in the public administration, and which can hardly be eliminated from the management of the colony, that is the source of that independence and self-righting spirit which is of the very essence of colonialism, and which seems almost innate in the Anglo-Saxon. Anyway, our colonies everywhere have been going forward with leaps and bounds, while the mother country has been standing still.

of inaction. It was an ambitious as well as a patriotic effort, that of the German Government, inspired by Prince Bismarck, to bring to a successful issue the lines of Great Britain's successes in the colonial field. But when we think of the excitement and almost alarm which the new departure caused a few years ago in some colonial circles, we cannot avoid being struck by the contrast between promise and performance in this apparently total collapse of the

The Legislature Council met yesterday afternoon, and, after some preliminary business, the debate upon the Customs Duties Bill was resumed. Previous to the resumption of the debate, Dr. Gorman presented a petition from the members of the bill, the text being the same throughout. Exception was, however, taken to the phraseology used by the petitioners, or, rather, their disingenuousness, in a reference to the bill, taken by the majority in the other Chamber. It was more than hinted that the pledge given at the last general election, to support the bill, was not a binding covenant light too long, and had it blocked the path of promotion for young and rising statesmen, Mr. J. J. O'Connell would not have had relations with the Agent-General, a matter of history, had the modesty to refinement making a personal attack on Sir Charles. The Agent-General should be occupied the day should be changed, as you are, as that he might be in for some political and financial question the subject of the Opposition should stand by the Agent-General, and there were numerous other members ready to testify to his ability, and the members of the Assembly had been true to their electoral vows the measure would never have come before the House. The reflection upon the honour and integrity of the other House was strongly resented by Mr. R. E. O'Connor, who submitted to the President that such remarks would tend to excite a spirit of "lower politics" were against the Standing Orders. Mr. O'Connor after number then stood up on the Government side of the House and exhibited anxiety to prevent the House from any further reflection. However, the Opposition upheld the rights of petitioners. Mr. D. O'Connor being especially and apparently to petition in good set terms. The President did not think that the language complained of was such as can be taken in the terms of the Standing Order which limited the petitions in toto. The debate was resumed by Mr. D. O'Connor. Other members followed, and at about half-past 9 o'clock Mr. R. E. Lee rose and the reserved questions were put to the House being then crowded over by members of the Assembly. The reply by the Minister for Justice was short and spirited, and a little before 10 o'clock the House divided; the result being that 26 members voted for the second reading and 17 against it.

The Premier explained that the money was needed to bring out the wine and children, the statures, and the coming of the new system of immigration. These men I contrast with the Government, and the tariff the regulations must be kept. The objections are made, it was pointed out that men who came to the colony seven or eight years ago had no power all their lives in making laws. The general tone the speech seemed to look upon this time as adverse; many

The rumal was seized with cheering and counter-cheering. Of the 24 members who failed to record their votes eight paired. The 16 who recorded their votes were—Mr. Lockett (the President), Sir Julian Salomons (absent from the colony), Sir Patrick Jennings (absent from the colony), Messrs. Conrad, de la Rue, Kerr, Knox, Macpherson, C. J. Roberts, Tarrant, Thornton, Trickett, Walker, and Combe. The consideration of the measure in committee has been made an order for to-day.

Two other important matters were voted upon after the Assembly met yesterday.

afternoon, Sir Henry Parkes, of the Government, then stated the position on the subject. The Government, it seems, has not entirely forgotten the magic word federation. It has been keeping a close watch upon it, and intends to carry it out as early as it can down in the present Administration took office. As it is manifestly impossible to deal with federation during the present session, Mr. Dibbs intends to introduce a bill to be carried over next session. A resolution will be submitted covering the whole principle of federation, and then the Constitution Bill will be placed at the disposal of the House, so that it may be taken up when it about or alter it as much as they choose, and will have the mangled sentences of the President's address, another Convention will be called to see if it is possible to put life again into the Federal Constitution. Federation having thus been made, made another futile attempt to leave the secret financial resources which have induced Mr. Dibbs to pursue a visit to London. Night after night Mr. Tooley has called this question, and the answer has been put off from week to week, and sometimes with a joke. Yesterday Mr. Dibbs took a more direct course, and seriously advised Mr. Tooley to drop the question, and to get on with his best friend.

The member for South Sydney gave quite different views on this shrewdness, and, declaring that he was not going to be a friend of the Government, but as a friend of the people, left the Chamber in duologue.

Turning the Estimates on one side for the moment, the Government went on with the proposition to increase the rate for the transport of land boilers. No one had any doubt as to the desirableness of such a bill, hence Mr. Dibble, when asking the House to agree to the increase, and not to be hurried to give a full explanation on the second reading, and so the labour rest, having declared its intention of seeing land. In the scheme a detailed plan, and alterations in the system had been sent for checking a perfect system had been sent for checking and collecting passenger tickets the irregularities existing on the suburban lines in regard to ties were very considerably reduced. The lines between the Liverpool and the Glasgow Junction and Homestead, as carried out, would not exceed £431,540. The total value of the new lines would be £1,000,000 for the 1500 miles of 1891, and would cost at £75,000 per mile. This amount, the report states, has been to the estimate of 1893, which will bring the total

RABBIT PAST.

THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD

Will you use your powerful influence to the unfortunate station-holders in the rabbit-infested of the Darling River? All our efforts as there is so much harbour for them in the country. The Government has spent thousands are killed every hour, they need to be out of us, and I fear it is only a matter of time before we shall have to abandon the country. Our only hope is to give Mr. Pasteur's scheme a trial, and to back it in the Government protection, and to give it the same treatment as the other. I am sure that this Act altered so that the experiment tried in our far-away and thinly-inhabited I believe great good would be the result. I am sure that the Government will do it, but I think we may put faith in Mr. Pasteur's scheme, and I am sure that there is no danger to human life, and that the disease of chicken cholera will destroy
